. . but it will not automatically stop when inserted into the USB device that is inserted into the Windows machine. It only seems to be an issue with USB drives. When I take the SD card out and put it into another USB device it stops. If I can figure out how to get it to automatically stop it would save me a lot of trouble. A: You can change the start action using a registry key (Open up the Windows Registry). Name the key (for example "Rescan3.16.018") and set the value to 1. That will make it start on insert of the SD card. Note that for the action to take effect the SD card must be inserted and the switch of Rescan to on, and then the USB device must be used. If this does not work then you need to use Rescan 3.16.018 and click on the "Check for updates" button. In the RESCAN 3.16.018 help file (go to the "Check for updates" button) there is a section about the "startOnInsert" key. Make sure that you have it set to 1. The following screenshot shows what you'll need to do. HTH. Q: C# Get random, 4 digit number range of numbers I want to create a script that allows me to select a random number from a number range. For instance, if the numbers are 1-100, I want a random number that is between 1 and 100. The only method I have for randomizing a number is using new Random().Next(1, 101) How do I add the range of numbers in? var random = new Random(); var min = 1; var max = 100; var res = random.Next(min, max); Or: var res = min + random.Next(max - min); To a population that has suffered substantial financial setbacks due to the recession, California is offering a badly needed tax break. It's called "personhood," and it's being offered up to foster parents who are willing to take in more than two orphaned children. The idea is that a child or two, no matter how small, is still just one small piece of a human being. " 82157476af
